The first Reformed church in Iceland was built in 1533 by German Lutheran fishermen. They were traders with the Hanseatic League, a commercial coalition of Northern Germany (and across Northern Europe) that was involved in fishing and trading. So Germans were regularly in Iceland, and they brought the Reformation with them.

October is Reformation month. It is so designated because Martin Luther's 95 Theses were initially published in October 1517. Whether they were actually nailed to the Castle Church door in Wittenberg is a matter of some debate. What is not debated, however, is the lasting impact they made on the church of the sixteenth century.
